Bee thoughts.

Exchange.

There seems scarcely a limit to the increase of bees where feed is plenty. They go with civil zation, and like Greeley, they seem to favor going weat. Whether this is a rule with them in all parts of the country we cannot say. A man who does field work told us recently that during the summer four swarms had passed over his head, two of them so low that he stooped to avoid contact with them. All of these were going weet, or a little south of weat. Probably it was because tail timber lay in that direction.

There is a bee tree within ten miles of the voyage was him can bare to have him come back to me."

"You will have to go to court and get a warrant for his arrest," said the sexgeant.

"Op, I don't want to have him come back to me."

"Well, then, we can do nothing for you," replied the sergeant. "If you get a warrant for his arrest for abandonment we will said look for him for you."

"N.y. n; I don't want to have him served to avoid contact with them. All of these will go and look for nim myest," continued the lady. And she left in search of the missing husband.

Probably it was because tall limber lay in that direction.

Torre is a ben tree within ten miles of St. Lonis, on the farm of a widow lady who rotects the tree from the woodman's are and the bees from all interference. the bees get ready to awarm they go where they like with her approval, and no one that ears them nay. For twenty years, we are told, they have thus enjoyed their bee rights.

While bees seem inclined to move west hey love an early peep at the rising sun, and glways select a tree as the place of heir abode which has an eastern entrance. They are early risers. We make the practice of going to the apilary as the first step of the morning's work. In midenumer, when honey abounds, we generally find come bees going out and frequently some coming home with stores, before the sun rises. A man may know a great deal to tearn about them, With all their system they are a mystery. They gather honey all lay and in busy season build comb at night.
